I. Authority

The Code of Virginia, § 30-156, authorizes the Virginia State Crime Commission (“Crime Commission”) to study, report and make recommendations “on all areas of public safety and protection.” Additionally, the Crime Commission is to study “compensation of persons in law enforcement and related fields” and to study “apprehension, trial and punishment of criminal offenders.”<sup>1</sup> Section 30-158(3) empowers the Crime Commission to “conduct studies and gather information and data in order to accomplish its purposes as set forth in § 30-156. . .and formulate its recommendations to the Governor and the General Assembly.”

Using the statutory authority granted to the Crime Commission, staff conducted a study on criminal gangs in Virginia, concentrating on the feasibility of creating an informational database that could assist prosecutors in gang prosecutions.

II. Executive Summary

---

During the 2005 Session of the Virginia General Assembly, Delegate David B. Albo introduced House Joint Resolution 573.<sup>2</sup> The resolution, which was passed by the General Assembly, directed the Virginia State Crime Commission to “study criminal street gang conduct and characteristics for the purpose of reducing the burden on prosecutors by producing a formal listing of gang names coupled with conduct and characteristics unique to those gangs.” During the same Session, Delegate Stephen Shannon introduced House Bill 2087,<sup>3</sup> which was referred to the House Courts of Justice Committee, and then referred to the Criminal Law sub-committee. The Criminal Law sub-committee sent a letter to the Crime Commission asking them to examine the issue; ultimately, this project was incorporated into the study directed by House Joint Resolution 573.

One of the requirements for a prosecution under Virginia’s criminal gang statutes<sup>4</sup> is proving that the criminal group involved meets the definition of a “criminal street gang.” This term has a precise definition,<sup>5</sup> and includes the requirement that the Commonwealth prove that the criminal group has members who “individually or collectively have engaged in the commission of...two or more predicate criminal acts, at least one of which is an act of violence....”<sup>6</sup> The terms “predicate criminal acts” and “act of violence” also have precise definitions which must be met in order to have a successful prosecution.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Throughout this report, the phrase “criminal street gang” will only be used when referring to a gang that meets the legal definition. When referring to a criminal group that does not meet the definition, alternative phrases will be used; i.e. “criminal gang,” or “gang.” A person who belongs to a gang that meets the legal definition will be referred to as “a member of a ‘criminal street gang.’” Members of other groups will be referred to as “gang members,” “members of a criminal gang,” or other similar terms.

Discussions with gang investigators and members of Virginia’s Attorney General’s office revealed that one of the chief hindrances for prosecutors in using the gang statutes is the burden of showing that a “gang” meets the definition of a “criminal street gang.” Prosecutors will typically employ an expert witness to testify to the characteristics of a particular gang, including such things as the gang’s usual territory, and any “identifying sign or symbol” which the gang generally employs.<sup>8</sup> However, proving that members of the gang have engaged in two or more predicate criminal acts can be difficult.

Creating a database of identified gang members, along with their convictions for offenses that qualify as predicate criminal acts, would be a helpful tool for Commonwealth’s Attorneys in this regard. Such a database could facilitate a prosecutor’s trial preparation in a gang case by informing him what evidence is available to prove this element of the offense. Obtaining certified copies of a conviction, especially for felony offenses committed in Virginia, would then be a relatively simple task.<sup>9</sup>

The basic data needed to create such a database for prosecutors is already gathered on a routine basis by the Virginia Department of Corrections and the Virginia Department of Juvenile Justice. Both agencies interview all inmates (or committed juveniles in the case of the Department of Juvenile Justice) as part of the admission process into state facilities, specifically screening for and seeking to identify gang members. This screening is done for facility security purposes as well as the personal safety of the individual inmates.<sup>10</sup> If the criminal histories of these identified gang members were examined and specific convictions for “predicate criminal acts,” including “acts of violence,” were collated, a “gang database” for prosecutors would automatically

<sup>6</sup> VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-46.1 (Michie 2005). Attempts and conspiracies to commit predicate criminal acts also suffice, as do solicitations. Id.

<sup>7</sup> VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-46.1 (Michie 2005). There are over twenty-five statutes that are listed in the definition of a “predicate criminal act,” although for some, only certain subsections of the statute qualify. “An act of violence” is also listed as a possible “predicate criminal act.” The definition of “act of violence” is “those felony offenses described in subsection A of § 19.2-297.1.” VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-46.1 (Michie 2005). There are over fifteen additional crimes contained in subsection A of Code of Virginia § 19.2-297.1.

<sup>8</sup> See VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-46.1 (Michie 2005). Demonstrating that the criminal group has “an identifiable name or identifying sign or symbol” is one of the requirements for proving the existence of a “criminal street gang.”

<sup>9</sup> Technically, proving that members of the “criminal street gang” have engaged in the commission of two or more predicate criminal acts does not require proof of actual convictions. However, as this is an element that must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, actual convictions will usually be the easiest way for prosecutors to satisfy this burden.

<sup>10</sup> Anecdotal evidence indicates that inmates are frequently truthful about their membership in a gang when interviewed by facility intake officers. The inmates are well aware of the personal danger they might face if they were inadvertently housed with members of a rival gang. It should also be noted that the admission screening process involves more than simply asking and taking on faith the answers of the inmates—tattoos, criminal case histories and other factors are also used in determining gang affiliations.

result. This database could then be updated on a periodic basis, providing prosecutors throughout the state with a useful and continually evolving information source.

Recommendation

The Commonwealth's Attorneys' Services Council should establish and maintain a statewide list of identified gang members who have been convicted of "predicate criminal acts," including "acts of violence." This information can then be disseminated to Commonwealth's Attorneys as needed, to assist in criminal street gang prosecutions. Information for this collated list should come from the Virginia Department of Corrections and the Virginia Department of Juvenile Justice, and should be updated on a monthly basis. Code of Virginia § 16.1-300 should be amended to allow the Virginia Department of Juvenile Justice to provide this information to the Commonwealth's Attorneys Services Council, and to allow the Department of Juvenile Justice to provide similar information to any state criminal justice agency for purposes of conducting research.

III. Methodology

The Virginia State Crime Commission utilized three research methodologies to accomplish the directives of House Joint Resolution 573. First, basic information was gathered about the presence and characteristics of criminal gangs in Virginia. Informational interviews were held with members of the Virginia Attorney General's Office, law enforcement, and the Virginia Gang Investigators Association. Previously compiled reports were also reviewed.

Second, discussions were held with prosecutors, the Virginia Attorney General's Office, and the Commonwealth's Attorneys Services Council as to what assistance would be useful for prosecutors wishing to make greater use of Virginia's criminal gang statutes.

Third, staff gathered records from the Department of Corrections (DOC) and the Department of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) to determine which Virginia gangs had members who were currently incarcerated, and of those members, if any had been convicted of "predicate criminal acts." The criminal records of identified gang members in the DOC population were analyzed by the Crime Commission to determine the prevalence of qualifying predicate criminal acts, with the ultimate goal of seeing if it would be possible to derive a database list for use by Virginia prosecutors. In the case of the committed juvenile population, confidentiality provisions limited DJJ to providing information on the presence of gang members in the correctional centers and whether these unidentified gang members had ever been found guilty of a "predicate criminal act." Information on individual youths was not obtained with any specificity.

IV. Background

---

During the intake process at Virginia DOC and DJJ facilities, officers screen the newly admitted prisoners (or committed juveniles) for gang affiliations, as well as photograph and mark placement of tattoos. Many times, inmates who are gang members will voluntarily disclose this information. This intake screening process assists in preventing the undue violence that might result if members of rival gangs were housed in the same cell. The incentive of self-preservation gives credibility to the inmates' gang-affiliation assertions; any tattoos they might have can serve as independent confirmation.

Department of Corrections Analysis

As of September 2005, there were 716 DOC inmates classified as gang members. These gang members have been convicted of 5,244 crimes, with an average of 7.32 crimes per gang member. Attachment C lists the number of gang members present in each of the DOC facilities.<sup>11</sup> The facilities with the largest gang presence are:

- Wallens Ridge State Prison (62);
- Deep Meadow Correctional Center (53);
- Nottoway Correctional Center (41);
- Sussex I State Prison (34);
- Dillwyn Correctional Center (33); and,
- Powhatan "M" Building (32).

There are a wide variety of gangs within these facilities; 114 gangs are present in Virginia's prisons. Attachment D provides a complete list of all of these different gangs. The overall gangs with the largest number of members in DOC facilities are:

- Bloods (108);
- Crips (101);
- Five Percenter (85);
- MS 13 (80);
- Gangster Disciples (76); and,
- Aryan Brotherhood (33).

Department of Juvenile Justice Analysis

As for DJJ, a surprisingly large percentage (249 of 979, or 26%) of all committed juveniles have been identified as gang members, with 75% of them convicted of multiple offenses. These members are incarcerated in the seven juvenile correctional centers listed below:

---

<sup>11</sup> It is important to note that within gangs there can be different sets that are smaller distinct organizational units that have the same gang name but do not have knowledge or coordination with the other sets under that gang name. For example, Bloods in Roanoke might not have any coordination or active communications with Bloods from the Hampton Roads area.

- Beaumont (85);
- Bon Air (68);
- RDC (36);
- Culpepper (31);
- Hanover (16);
- Oak Ridge (7);
- Natural Bridge (5);
- Hanover (16); and,
- Tidewater (1).

Incarcerated juvenile gang members are from 38 different gangs. A complete list of gangs by juvenile correctional center is provided in Attachment E. The gangs with the most members were:

- Bloods (119);
- Crips (65);
- Folk Nation (14); and,
- MS 13 (6).

Department of Corrections Predicate Crime Analysis

The definition of “criminal street gang” membership within the Code of Virginia has four specific characteristics:

- Three or more persons;
- One of its primary activities is the commission of criminal activities;
- Identifiable name, sign, or symbol; and,
- Members individually or collectively have engaged in the commission of two or more “predicate criminal acts,” at least one of which is an act of violence.<sup>12</sup>

As is evident, it is not enough for a group of individuals to create a sign and have a general intent to become “gang members” or carry out criminal activities. To be considered a “criminal street gang,” the members need to have committed two or more predicate criminal acts, one of which must have been a violent act. This last element of the definition can be the most difficult for prosecutors to prove, due to the time and effort it takes to find other gang members that have engaged in predicate crimes.

Of the 716 gang members incarcerated by DOC,<sup>13</sup> 476 of them had in fact been convicted of predicate criminal acts. Of these, 463 members had a known gang

<sup>13</sup> DOC does not use the legal definition to determine gang membership but rather a more general one, corresponding to what a layperson thinks of when he hears the word “gang.” DOC determines membership in a gang using a variety of factors, including affirmation or self-identification by inmates, tattoos, markings and other relevant materials.

affiliation; 13 did not. The 716 gang members had been convicted of 3,623 crimes, out of which 1,136 were predicate crimes. The members that had been convicted of predicate crimes had committed, on average, 7.6 crimes each. Out of those 7.6 crimes, 2.4 crimes, on average, were predicate crimes. Simply stated, these inmates had extensive criminal records.

While DOC records indicate the presence of over 100 gangs and sub-sets within DOC facilities, the number is lower when applying the stricter, legal definition of a “criminal street gang.” An analysis of the DOC identified gangs revealed that only 70 could definitively be shown to be “criminal street gangs.” Two gangs came close to meeting the definition of a “criminal street gang,” but had only one individual convicted of a single predicate crime. Another gang came even closer, with members who had been convicted of two predicate crimes, none of which were violent crimes, though.<sup>14</sup>

Because some gangs share the same name but are actually two separate groups, geographically separated, with little contact, a further analysis was done by separating the predicate convictions by locality.<sup>15</sup> This was to help eliminate the possibility that a crime, seemingly committed by a member of one gang, was actually committed by a member of a different gang with the same name. This breakdown revealed there were 54 localities where there was at least one gang for which all of the requisite predicate offenses needed to legally establish their status as a “criminal street gang” occurred in that one locality. As a side note, when gang affiliation is limited by locality and all gangs in all localities are added together, the total comes to 270 gangs. Of course, some of these multiple listings do in fact constitute just one gang.

This type of analysis could be helpful in individual cases to rebut or forestall arguments that the accused is not a member of the same gang that has been shown to have committed various “predicate criminal acts.” An accused member of the “Bloods” who lives in the City of Richmond, and is on trial in the City of Richmond, might not be affiliated with the “Bloods” who committed a series of robberies in Roanoke. However, the accused will have a much more difficult time arguing that he is not connected with the “Bloods” who committed a series of robberies in Richmond, unless it can be established that in that one city, there are two mutually exclusive gangs, with different leaders and no interaction, that happen to share the same name.

V. Conclusion and Recommendation

---

Multiple studies, formal and informal, have been done on the presence of criminal gangs in Virginia. Groups such as the Virginia Gang Investigators Association routinely

---

<sup>14</sup> This analysis reveals another useful purpose for the creation of a “criminal gang” database. While currently there are an insufficient number of predicate crime convictions for these three gangs to be prosecuted under Code of Virginia § 18.2-46.1 et seq., by keeping track of future convictions, prosecutors (and law enforcement) will be able to ascertain when a criminal gang has “graduated” to “criminal street gang” status. Thus, the database could serve as a useful “monitoring” tool.

keep track of both established and newly formed gangs in the Commonwealth, and disseminate this information to prosecutors and law enforcement agencies. While this information is important and can be useful, a tool specifically designed for prosecutors seeking criminal gang indictments is needed. Knowing the early history of a gang and its identifiable symbols is important, but prosecutors also need to be able to prove that a gang meets the strict legal definition of a “criminal street gang.” While an expert witness can testify to aspects of gang culture, and can show that a group does indeed have an “identifying sign or symbol,” a prosecutor will still need proof that the gang has members who have committed at least two “predicate criminal acts.” A database containing information about identified gang members, and their previous criminal convictions, would be very helpful for a prosecutor who needs to prove that other gang members have committed certain crimes.

The Crime Commission’s study revealed that the information routinely gathered by the Virginia Department of Corrections and the Virginia Department of Juvenile Justice could be used to create and maintain such a database. Periodic updates provided by both departments could allow prosecutors to monitor the development of new gangs in Virginia, and ascertain whether they have finally reached the level of being a “criminal street gang.” More importantly, when preparing for trial in a gang member prosecution, prosecutors would not have to search around for proof of prior convictions by other gang members. Instead, they would know exactly which courts to contact for certified copies of convictions.

Recommendation

The Virginia Department of Corrections and the Virginia Department of Juvenile Justice should forward their data on inmates who are gang members to the Virginia Commonwealth’s Attorneys Services Council. The Council can act as a clearinghouse for prosecutors throughout the state, providing assistance with gang prosecutions. The data from the Department of Corrections and the Department of Juvenile Justice should be updated on a monthly basis, to help ensure that the conviction data available to prosecutors is as up-to-date as possible. While currently the Virginia Department of Juvenile Justice is limited in what information about committed juveniles they can share, this problem is easily fixed; a slight amendment to Code of Virginia § 16.1-300 will allow the Department to forward their juvenile gang information to the Commonwealth’s Attorneys Services Council for use in gang prosecutions. Code of Virginia § 16.1-300 should also be amended to allow Virginia criminal justice agencies access to juvenile data for study purposes, provided that no information on an individual juvenile is publicly released.
