Summary

The Virginia Commission on Civics Education was established as a result of the passage of House Bill 1769, sponsored by Delegate James Dillard. It was approved on March 26, 2005. The purposes of the Commission on Civics Education, as stated in the legislation, include the education of students on the importance of citizen involvement in a representative democracy, the promotion of the study of state and local government among the commonwealth's citizenry, and the enhancement of communication and collaboration among organizations in the commonwealth that conduct civic education programs. The commission is charged with developing and coordinating outreach programs in collaboration with schools to educate students on the importance of representative democracy as a process dependent on reasoned debate, good faith negotiation, and compromise. The commission also should educate students concerning individual involvement as a critical factor in community success, and that consideration of and respect for others must be shown when deliberating, negotiating, and advocating positions on public concerns.

The first meeting of the commission was held on September 28, 2005. The group unanimously elected Delegate Robert Tata as chairman and Glen H. Hoptman as vice-chairman. The membership is composed of elected officials; representatives from higher education, the public schools, and the Virginia Department of Education; private individuals; and the press. There are six ex-officio members.

During the initial meeting of the commission there was extensive discussion of the need for both civics and civic education. Declining voter participation and lack of knowledge of state and local government were mentioned as areas of concern. Also discussed were local and national programs that attempt to address some of these problems and to promote civic participation and knowledge of government in general.

Numerous studies have demonstrated a lack of knowledge about government on the part of students attending schools in the United States. These inadequacies include little knowledge of the identities of elected representatives at all levels of government and a general lack of understanding of how government works. There is also a need for a higher level of citizen participation in the governmental process. Since young people in the United States are not as likely to vote as older adults, a discussion of the duties and responsibilities of citizenship while students are in school is essential.

The Commission on Civics Education plans to promote the importance of understanding the governmental process with emphasis on state and local government. The commission will examine the concept of civic education and the growth of service-learning programs. It will study possible solutions that encourage more participation in the governmental process.

The second meeting of the commission is scheduled for January 3, 2006. The commission will continue to discuss the state of civics education in the commonwealth with a goal of making recommendations to the 2007 Virginia General Assembly.
