Interim Report

The Virginia Commission on Civics Education was established as a result of the passage of House Bill 1769, sponsored by Delegate James Dillard. It was approved on March 26, 2005. The purposes of the Commission on Civics Education, as stated in the legislation, include the education of students on the importance of citizen involvement in a representative democracy, the promotion of the study of state and local government among the Commonwealth's citizenry, and the enhancement of communication and collaboration among organizations in the Commonwealth that conduct civic education programs.

Membership of the Commission on Civics Education is composed of elected officials, representatives from higher education, public schools, the Virginia Department of Education, private individuals, and the press. There are six ex-officio members. Delegate Robert Tata continues to serve as chairman and Glen H. Hoptman as vice-chairman of the commission. Meetings of the commission were held on September 18, 2006; December 4, 2006; February 26, 2007; June 11, 2007; and August 3, 2007.

The September 18, 2006, meeting was largely devoted to an overview of civics resources that were made available to teachers on a new Web site entitled, Everyday Civics. The Web site was launched earlier in September 2006 as part of the mission of the Commission on Civics Education. This Web site contains lesson plans, content, and teacher resources related to the Virginia History and Social Science Standards of Learning. Additional discussion at the September meeting centered on how to best give teachers more resources related to civics. Facilitators from the Youth Leadership Initiative at the Center for Politics at the University of Virginia also presented information on their work promoting student involvement in civic life.

The December 4, 2006, meeting began with a report on the Fourth Annual Congressional Conference on Civic Education and an outline of the programs offered by the Center for Civic Renewal. This was followed by reports from three commission subcommittees. The Subcommittee on Civic Education proposed offering civics seminars to teachers across the state. The Subcommittee on Instruction and Curriculum discussed making resources more available and the importance of the upcoming review of the Virginia Standards of Learning. The Subcommittee on Professional Development suggested that teacher training programs across grade levels be developed and called for increased collaboration with businesses to support civics instruction.

In addition to the meetings described above, several opportunities were offered in fall 2006 for Virginia teachers to learn about best practices in civics education. A civics symposium was held in Roanoke in November followed by a second civics symposium in Richmond at the end of the month. Civics and government teachers from many school divisions participated in these one-day activities that focused on new content and materials available to support the Standards of Learning. There were also presentations about civic programs and resources in Virginia that promote innovative approaches to civics education. Many of these programs and speakers were highlighted at a weekend civics institute held in Richmond during December 2006. The weekend institute provided an in-depth examination of topics, programs, and resources that could not be offered in the single-day activities.

The February 2007 meeting focused on proposed suggestions to the History and Social Science Standards of Learning drafted by the Subcommittee on Instruction and Curriculum. The preliminary suggestions included an emphasis on both local government and a more active learning style. The June 2007 meeting highlighted a resolution passed by the General Assembly designating September 17 – 21, 2007, as Civics Education Week. A subcommittee was formed to plan a Civics Summit for teachers that would be held during Civics Education Week. There was also a proposal to print and distribute posters displaying the Bill of Rights to public schools in Virginia. In addition, sponsorship for publishing an updated version of The Good People of Virginia was proposed as a textbook resource for teachers. The August 2007 meeting was devoted to reporting progress on publishing that resource, planning the summit, and exploring ways to continue the commission's mission beyond June 2008.

On September 20, 2007, educators from across the state joined members of the Civics Commission at the Civics Summit in the Capitol Building in Richmond. In addition to remarks from Virginia's First Lady, there were recognized experts speaking on civics education, as well as presentations and panel discussions featuring representatives from state and local civics organizations. Staff members from the House of Delegates and Senate also offered information on both chambers. Each teacher received books and packets of materials on civics education from multiple sources. Pod casts of the main presentations are being posted on the Everyday Civics Web site.
